Believing Is Seeing, though perceptive about photography, is fundamentally concerned with something very different: epistemology. Morris is chiefly interested in the nature of knowledge, in figuring out where the truth—in both senses—lies...It is impossible to read Believing Is Seeing without the word "obsessive" coming to mind.

In his latest book, Academy Award-winning documentarian Errol Morris writes with genuine gusto: "It is often said that seeing is believing. But we do not form our beliefs on the basis of what we see; rather, what we see is often determined by our beliefs. Believing is seeing, not the other way around" (93). While these types of statements are common in documentary films, serving to ...
